

FELIX GRANT

Felix Grant's distinctively mellow voice has been heard in Washington, D.C. since 1945. He began his brilliant career on radio station WWDC-AM. After several years with that station he joined the air staff of WMAL-AM. He spent thirty years there as host of the "Album Sound", playing jazz, blues, and Latin rhythms. All the while, and even today, Grant worked hard to expose competent musicians, whether or not they were known. He played a significant role in promoting Brazilian and Jamician culture through music in the United States. It is for this reason Grant was dubbed "Ambassador of Music".

In 1984 Felix made the transition to WRC-AM, and then he joined WDCU-FM in 1987. He has the same pride and professionalism that has been his trademark over the years. With complete autonomy over his "World of Jazz" show, Grant continues to program the best in jazz, blues, and international "source" music.

Reflecting on this 40 years in radio, Felix Grant marvels, "I can't believe 40 years have gone by". But his awards and honors received over four impressive decades of service are a testament to his impact on the world of music and radio.
